ESTABLISHED 1844

IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Captain John and Simeon Ola.

The ladrones had been making things lively in the mountains of the Province of Albay, in lower Luzon. Depredations had been committed which could not be overlooked and an air of uneasiness had been seized by the bravest hearts. In Polangui a body of red-breasted soundreils had committed murder in one of the principal streets and had stolen enough goods to last them a full month in the mountains.

Word had reached Manila that things were not going well in Albay and the commanding General gave orders to the Captain of the Constabulary to stamp out the lawlessness at any cost.

Captain John, a tall, fearless fellow from Ilocos was in command of the Constabulary. Captain John was of the sort who goes to the ends of the earth to hunt a fight. He preferred good fight to a Spanish name any time, now ever, he never allowed a battle to pass without lending his presence, and his constitution was such that he could sit over the Anabases Bush as long as the next one, be the native or foreign born.

The orders from Manila found Captain John fifteen miles from his post, out in the mountains after Simeon Ola. John had been on Ola's track for six months but had never had the good fortune to force him to a fight. John was growing desperate when he received the commanding General's orders. He had chased Ola all the way from Ilocos to Camaguey Norte, back by Laguna de Bato, and out by Talayay, in fact all the Province and several times through all sorts of weather. He was itching to come up with him, but he seemed no nearer to it than he had been several months before.

When John received this message from Manila he came into his quarters to make new plans and for tonight he slept on his army cot instead of the ground. On the next morning he rose early, as was his custom, and was standing in the doorway of the Constabulary when two men in a neighboring barrio came up and saluted the captain. John who was by the time he had finished speaking John knocked him silly, grabbed him by the back of his head and shook him till he dropped like a sack.

After he had finished speaking John knocked him silly, grabbed him by the back of his head and shook him till he dropped like a sack.

John saw that the men were telling him the truth (which does not happen often in the Philippines) and immediately made preparations to go after his man.

He ordered each soldier to provide himself with a rifle for three days march, and set out at once for the barrio of Bolio where the trouble had occurred. John was so eager for a fight that he would have faced the whole of Ola's company alone with nothing more than his repeating shot gun and six shells.

After leaving Bolio John and his company a forced march for six hours. His men were all Filipinos and were by no means the best of the Philippine army. They were tired and began to demur at his strenuous chase, but John had no more idea of stopping just then than he had when he was once acrossed his wings on the Philippine shore bound for Savannah River.

One little boy named Puppino followed him. Juan, who was a recruit and did not know Captain John was outspoken and plainly told him that he could go on with him, but that he would not follow him. The little boy turned in his tracks and glared at the little brown skin and yelled in a stentorian voice, "Que coño es tu?"

"I'm not going any further," said the soldier, and before he had finished speaking John knocked him silly, grabbed him by the back of his head and shook him till he dropped like a sack.

carrel. He replied that it was about half a mile. The band and parrots made the weak ring with their lingo, but the quiet of the night was falling. The night falls here. It comes like the shadow of an eclipse. The sun falls straight down and soon it is gone.

John was standing in his bunch of soldiers like a telephone pole among a lot of yard plants. He was looking at his watch. He had been waiting for months by Ola and he made up his mind that he would not take Ola alive. Had not the second time been captured twice, and had not the Government pardoned him and turned him loose, and had not Ola immediately taken to the mountains again? What was the use? No, he would not take Ola alive.

John knew that it would not do to take all his company to the carrel. He would be sure to flush the cox. If he did, he would not wish to do this. Flushing the carrel was a job for a few men. John took his first lieutenant and two other soldiers together with the man he had captured and leaving the rest, proceeded toward the carrel. They were soon near the place. When he had located the carrel he saw three men in charge of the prisoner and went after Ola alone.

John stalked through the darkness, like a brown snake, until he had located the carrel. He passed safely, slipping through while the guard was lighting his cigarette. He then examined his shot gun and pistol to see that they were ready for the business in hand. They were ready. He could see the door of the carrel and the light within. He was exultant. He would soon be in the midst of the fight of his life. He had been waiting for months by Ola and he made up his mind that he would not take Ola alive.

FOR CONSTIPATION

A Medicine That Does Not Cost Anything Unless It Cures.

If you suffer from constipation in any form, whether acute or chronic, we will guarantee to supply you with medicine that will effect a cure if taken with regularity and according to directions for a reasonable length of time. Should the medicine fail to benefit you in your entire satisfaction, we promise that it shall cost you nothing.

No other remedy can be compared with Rexall's for the easy, pleasant and successful treatment of constipation. The active medicinal ingredient of this remedy is a powerful laxative, and is entirely new discovery. Combined with other extremely valuable ingredients, it forms a preparation which is incomparable as a perfect bowel regulator, intestinal invigorator and strengthening agent. It is gentle and pleasant to take. They do not "loose" or "loosen" the bowels, but they do "cleanse" and "refresh" the system.

We know that there is nothing that will do you so much good, and we will refund your money without argument if they do not do as we say they will. They are prepared in tablet form in two sizes of packages: 30 tablets, 25c, and 100 tablets, 10c. C. A. Millard & Co.
